the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995. The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 60% of public sector employees being women in 1995.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of women. One reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in the workforce. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that women are more likely than men to work in the public sector, and the fact that women are more likely than men to work in the public sector in the health and social care sectors. Another reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in the workforce who are in the lower pay grades. This is due to the fact that women are more likely than men to work in the public sector in the lower pay grades, and the fact that women are more likely than men to work in the public sector in the lower pay grades in the health and social care sectors.
